Dear Elena,

I've been swamped, which you could have imagined in light of my failure to write before now. Got your two very nice letters and enclosures. Have started into reading Finnegan's Wake--strike that, your case. Bill O'Brien sounds like a very good possibility for collaboration. I'm a few months away from beginning in earnest on the book about judges; some publishing commitments come first. I'll be in NY April 5-8 for the annual meeting of the American Society of International Law. Oh, yes, you can give anyone permission to reprint anything I've written; you don't have to ask. For me, the whole purpose of writing things is to get them disseminated. Take care.

Tony.
