Dear Ms. Sassower:

I have just discussed with Chairman Kastenmeyer your inquiry concerning access to the Commission and individual members of the Commission tomorrow. The Chairman will not permit any testimonial presentations tomorrow, and he doubts that individual Commissioners will have enough free time when not formally at work to indulge you. The Commission's business tomorrow is final approval of report recommendations and textual material which must be perfected for presentation to statutorily designated authorities on August 2.

The Chairman has directed that you again be advised that your individual complaint is not cognizable by the Commission. Beyond the attention already accorded your expressions of opinion no further attention can be accorded them now by the Commission.

Given the work our office faces in the immediate future we do not have time to continue to respond to your repetitive submissions, including daily telephone communications. While all of us in the office want to politely respond to any inquiries for information, we do not have the time to divert attention from business which now must be given a higher priority than your communications.

Your efforts at this point would more appropriately be directed to communicating with the House of Representatives.

Sincerely,

William J. Weller
